Naomi F. Collins is a writer and has served as a consultant to cultural and higher education organizations. She has served as Executive Director (and before that, Chair) of the Maryland Humanities Council, the Maryland affiliate of the National Endowment for the Humanities, and then as Executive Director of NAFSA: Association of International Educators.

She has published the book, Through Dark Days and White Nights: Four Decades Observing a Changing Russia (New Academia Press) followed by over 40 book talks. Edited oral interviews of her life has been posted by the Association for Diplomatic Studies and Training, and bound as Are We There Yet? One Spouse. Two sons. Three Professions: A Life Through Changing Times.

She has also produced studies for the American Council on Education (ACE), an association of U.S. university and college presidents; written the essay on the "Humanities" for Charles Scribner's Sons Encyclopedia of American Cultural & Intellectual History; and published "Understanding Our New Global Context Through the Liberal Arts" (*National Policies…*IIE, NY). Dr. Collins has also written and co-authored publications on 17th century English biography; on international education; and on the humanities, including Culture's New Frontier, published by the American Council of Learned Societies.

She has lived, worked, and traveled in Turkey, Jordan, Israel, Mexico, Canada, Germany, China, Central Asia, England, and Europe, in addition to intervals lived in Russia.

A member of Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Alpha Theta, she holds a Ph.D. in history from Indiana University.

Dr. Collins has served on panels, boards, and review committees concerned with cultural, educational, and museum issues, science and technology, international education, and the commemoration of the U.S. Constitution; and currently serves on the board of the Bethesda Metro Area Village and The Writer's Center.

Her biographic entries appear in Marquis Who's Who in America, 50th ed.; Who's Who in the East, 26th ed., Who's Who of American Women, 20th ed., International Who's Who of Professional and Business Women, 2nd ed., Cambridge, England.
(2020)